me?

I know nothing about hatred, violence, discrimination, anger, racism and greed.

I don't fully understand love, mercy, compassion, kindness, empathy and charity.

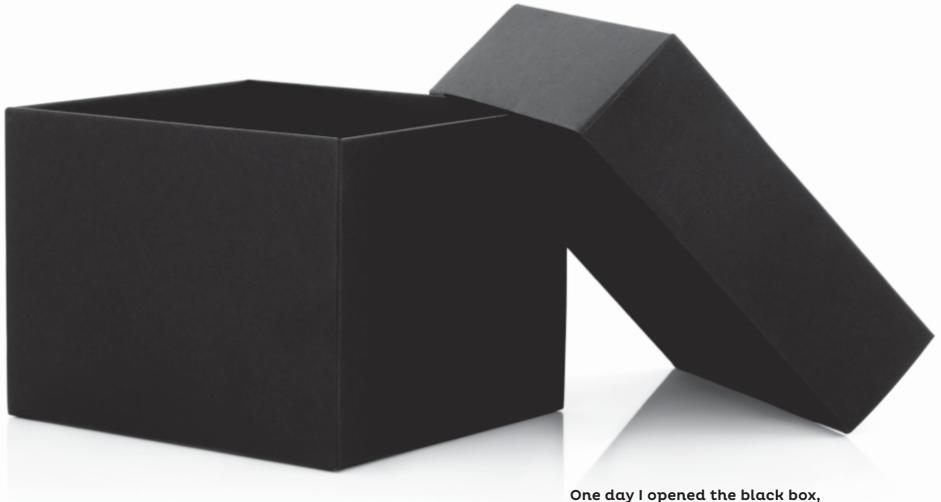

During my childhood I am developing a view of the world which is an extension of your view.

I am the living messenger that you are sending into the future!

God's Boxes

I have in my hands two boxes,

Which God gave me to hold.

He said, "Put your sorrows in the black box,

And likewise all your joys in the gold."

I listened to His words, and now in the boxes,
Both my joys and my sorrows I store,
But though the gold box is heavier each day,
The black was as light as before.

To find out why it was still so light,
And I saw, in the base of the box, a hole,
Where my sorrows had fallen from sight.

I showed the hole to God, and thought,
"I wonder where my sorrows could be!"
He smiled very gently and quietly said,
"My child, they are all here with me.."

I asked God, why He gave me these boxes to hold,
Why the gold one, and the black with the hole?
"My child, the gold one keeps your blessings so close,
And the black one is to help you let go."

I am a people watcher. I like nothing more on a day off than finding a nice coffee bar and sitting watching the world go by. I often have to collect visitors to the Priory from the airport and the arrivals lounge at Gatwick gives me an opportunity to indulge in this. You can see every range of emotion. In the arrivals lounge, more often than not it is joy. One of my prayer tasks for each day is to find and experience joy.

Joy is often an infrequent visitor in people's lives that is why I think we must seek it out. When we find it, it is often surprising where it comes from. Here at Aylesford Priory we have a Door of Mercy for this jubilee year. The door leads into our Reconciliation Chapel. Over the weeks we have been putting up the images and stories of people who have shown mercy through the ages, but especially those who reveal the merciful face of God in the world now. It doesn't take much to recognise these people in our midst. They are plentiful and inspiring. Some of the faces look tired and careworn but the most obvious feature of these faces of mercy is that they are joyful. Let me share with you the story of one young woman whose face is on our chapel wall that I placed there just last week.

Sr. Clare Crockett was born in Northern Ireland in 1982. She gave up a self-confessed wild teenage lifestyle and a budding acting career to work with some of the world's poorest. By her own admission her weekends centred around getting drunk but it was after an accidental pilgrimage and while shooting a film in England that the teenager decided to dedicate her life to helping others. The 33-year-old's vocation was laid bare in testimonies after joining the Servant Sisters of the Home of the Mother, based in Cantabria in Spain, as an 18-year-old in 2001.

From an early age Clare desired to be an actress and in her teens she got herself a manager and worked on some popular TV channels in the UK. She admitted that she worked hard and played hard. Her life changed when she accepted a free trip to Spain. Expecting a beach holiday she found herself in a monastery of religious sisters on retreat during Holy Week. Clare said she felt hostile to all that was happening around her, she didn't participate in the retreat or the liturgies but on Good Friday was persuaded to go to the Liturgy of the Passion. Venerating the cross that day changed her life. It was her first tangible experience of God and it unsettled her. Later, while on a film set in England, she recalled feeling empty and unhappy despite achieving her childhood dream.

"I saw that even though it seemed that I had everything in reality I had nothing," she said. She entered religious life and professed solemn vows in 2010. She was sent to serve in Ecuador and on the 16th April 2016 she was killed, one of the many victims of the earthquake that hit Playa Prieta in Ecuador. Every picture I have seen of her is full of joy. I watched a video of Sr. Clare giving a talk during World Youth Day in Madrid in 2012. Joy abounds. "It never ceases to amaze me how Our Lord works in the souls, how He can totally transform one's life and capture one's heart," she said. On the mornings when I open up the chapels I often ask her to say a wee prayer for me so that I can be a person who shows God's mercy. One of the profound truths that I have been learning over these last months since the year of mercy began is that Marcy is joyful and that is something that I deeply desire

Dear Reader

We have some changes coming to Reach – changes which will definitely improve the paper!

Firstly, we have a new editor called Julia Beacroft who will start in September. Julia is an author who writes about Catholicism in a very thoughtful but down to earth and funny way! She will have an editorial team to support her and we will introduce them in the next issue

We also have new staff starting in September to promote Reach to schools. This will give us more resources which we will use to develop the children's section of the paper so there's more in it to relate to children and to the classroom.

If you have any thoughts on the paper – ways it could be improved or things you like about it – or if you would like to welcome our new editor you can contact Julia at editor@cathcomreach.com

Thanks,

Nick

What do we teach our children?

Whether it is us as parents at home or our children's teachers at school, a lot of work goes into teaching our children. We think carefully about the best way to teach and about the impact this will have on their education and how this will form them as people. However, you cannot underestimate how much a child learns from observing the world around them and the behaviour of the role models they look up to.

We instinctively know as parents that we have to be aware of our temper, language and behaviour around our children. But what about lifestyle?

When we think of lifestyle we often think of what we eat, what we drink and the amount of exercise we take and we know that this will have a direct effect on the health of our children. But our lifestyle is much more than this – it is about the life-decisions we take and our attitudes to people.

Family Life

Spending time with our family is obviously important for the development of our children. Raising confident and happy children requires a warm, nurturing home environment. It also gives them the tools to deal with life and the problems we all encounter. We all have different situations but balancing money/work with spending time with the family is very difficult. The way we manage this balance each day has a direct impact on our children. But underlying this is an on-going, silent but very strong lesson in how they should live their lives.

How we balance our work and our family time teaches our children not only what is most important to us, but what should be most important to them. Additionally, the career we choose and the jobs we do will influence what they think is a priority in life. If we do a job only because it pays well this will teach our children money is the most important thing. If we spend all our time with our children and no time working to provide for them this will teach them that providing for ourselves and our children is not important. Sometimes we have to step back and look at our life as a whole and see how it teaches our children.

Finding Meaning in Life

On top of balancing money and family, it is important to understand how we find meaning in life will also teach our children what is important. If we do a job that help people, if we set aside time in our week to volunteer to care for people, or if we strive to change the world for the better – this will teach our children far more about the need to love our neighbour than just telling them.

Sharing

Imagine the situation, 2 children are fighting over 2 biscuits. One child has both biscuits the other has none. What do you say? SHARE!!!! Pope Francis has been constantly telling us to look after immigrants, many of whom were just like us until they lost everything. When we say "Share" to our children – are we just teaching by our words or are we willing to teach by example and share the things we have. When we look back to 2016 – in the same way people look back at World War II – will we look back and see a country that helped those who had lost everything? A country that shared? Or will we look back and see a country that turned its back on those that needed us. Will we see ourselves as the child that had 2 biscuits when someone next to us had none.

Space for God

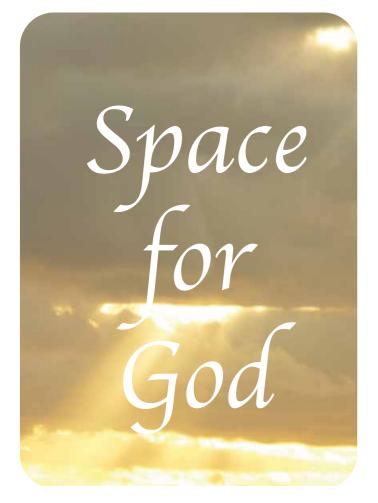

There's going to Church and there's going to Church! It is obvious that we cannot teach our children the importance of Catholicism, the Sacraments and Jesus' teachings if we do not take part by listening to God's Word and going to Church. However, the importance we put on going to Church and spending time with God will also teach our children a huge amount. If it's a last minute thought, if we go to Church when we're free, if we pray only when we need help, then this will teach our children that our Faith is not as important as everything else in life. If our children need to be picked up from school we don't do it only if we're free! We make sure we're there because its important. How important is our Faith in our lives?

While we try to teach our children all about life, our children teach us what life is all about.

Spending time in the outdoors Make a hanging basket

Step 1. The Basket

Baskets are usually made from wicker, or plastic coated wire. These require a liner to stop the compost from falling out, and to retain moisture whilst providing drainage. Liners can be made of felt, sphagnum moss, or plastic (with drainage holes).

You can also find solid plastic hanging baskets, which do not need a liner but do need holes for drainage in the bottom.

Step 4. Planting

Step 3. The Plants

It's up to you whether you put together a hanging basket with one variety of plants, or with several different plants. Just think about the overall effect that you want to create.

There are no rules about what you should and shouldn't use in a hanging basket, but it's best to avoid using plants that are going to get big quickly.

People often use summer bedding plants such as petunias, begonias, geraniums, fuchsias, and lobelia. You can also plant herbs, young shrubs, or edible plants like tomatoes and strawberries.

#Tip - You can create a balanced design by choosing a plant that will act as the main focal point in the middle and by positioning plants which are either the same variety, or have similarities, on opposite sides.

These are some examples that I put together. The first one features

Step 2. The Soil

More than just a Red Box

Last year the Red Box helped Fr Charles in Malawi buy a van. That van is saving lives. Fr Charles is able to celebrate Mass in distant communities and brings comfort by visiting the sick and housebound. Earlier this year it got a mother and baby to hospital just in time. Thank you.

If your Red Box hasn't been emptied for a while, please take it to church between 4-12 June or call 020 7821 9755 or give online at missio.org.uk/RedBox

Your Red Box donations go towards supporting the work of the Church throughout the world, and the Mill Hill Missionaries' work of evangelisation in 27 countries

Step 5. Aftercare

Generally speaking your hanging basket should be watered once or twice a day in the morning, or the evening. You can move it into the shade if the weather is really hot and dry.

You'll also need to remove dead flower heads because this keeps your basket looking tidier and it encourages more flowers to grow.

I hope these five steps have helped, good luck with your hanging baskets this summer!

The Good Samaritan

A man was going from Jerusalem to Jericho & fell into the hands of robbers him he passed by on the other side

A Samaritan came near him; and when he saw him he was moved with compassion to an inn and took care of him.

How can we harbour the harbourless?

"You DID IT TO ME"

The story the Good Samaritan is one of the parables of Jesus. He tells it in response to a question from a lawyer, who asks him 'who is my neighbour?' The story concerns a traveller on the way from Jerusalem to Jericho, who is attacked, robbed and left half-dead by the roadside. Two other travellers, one a priest and the other a Temple musician (Levite), both come across the injured man but decide to pass by on the other side. Finally, it is an outsider – a man from Samaria, which was a country that the Jews despised – who decides to stop and show compassion towards the man, who had been attacked. He takes him to a safe place and provides for his recovery. The lawyer and Jesus' listeners must have been very shocked by this story, which showed that this outsider better understood and fulfilled God's command to love than those who were meant to be God's chosen people.

The average garden in England is home to over 2,000 different species of insects! How many can you name? I don't think I can even name fifty!

Some of these insects, like bumble bees, are declining in numbers but we can help them by making them homes so they can crawl away from predators and shelter from bad weather. This gives them much more of a chance of surviving and luckily for us it's really simple.

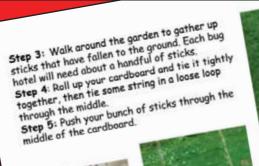

Making the Bug Hotel

Step 1: Cut out a large cardboard rectangle (A4 or A5 in size).

Step 2: Cut out a similar sized rectangle out of paper and decorate one side of it. Use colours that will attract bugs like greens, browns, or bright colours like you would see on flowers.

Don't stop there! You can make bug hotels any size, with all kinds of recycled materials so let your imagination run wild.

Step 6: Glue your decorated piece of paper around the cardboard Step 8: Your bug hotel is complete. Now hang it up in a bush, or tree, where the bugs will be able to find it and crawl in to hide away from predators.

#Tip - You can make your bug hotel last by placing it inside a plastic bottle. You'll through the end of the bottle so you can place your bug hotel inside.

P.s. How did you get on with your plastic bottle planters? Here are mine in full swing for the summer with parsley and oregano!

The Ascension of Jesus Acts, chapter 1 verses 6-11 6 So when they had come together, they asked him, 'Lord, is this the time when you will restore the kingdom to Israel?' 7 He replied, 'It is not for you to know the times or periods that the Father has set by his own authority. 8 But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth.' 9 When he had said this, as they were watching, he was lifted up, and a cloud took him out of their sight. 10 While he was going and they were gazing up towards heaven, suddenly two men in white robes stood by them. 11 They said, 'Men of Galilee, why do you stand looking up towards heaven? This Jesus, who has been taken up from you into heaven, will come in the same way as you saw him go into heaven.

One of my wonderful husband's little foibles is that he never refers to his mother-in-law – my mother – by her Christian name. Neither does he give her the courtesy title of 'Mum', which is sometimes used for in-laws. In fact, he always refers to her as 'Your mother'.

'When are you next seeing your mother?' he will ask. 'Is your mother feeling better now?' is another such example. Admittedly this may not seem particularly odd. However when my Mum is actually present and his method of address remains the same, I think you might appreciate how strange this can seem.

If we are sitting having a cup of tea and a chat, my husband will turn to me and say something like: 'Ask your mother if her heating is fixed now' or 'Will your mother be coming round at the end of the week? This is not to say that he doesn't talk to her and isn't fond of her – of course he does and is – but if using her name is involved, he bizarrely always calls her 'Your mother' and addresses her through me.

Yet whatever title we choose to give them, mothers are such an integral and important part of our lives. They provide for us, nourish us and try to equip us for all that we may experience in life.

Mary's Journey

Mary, Our Blessed Lady, fully understands the true meaning of motherhood. Having been tasked with the greatest commission of all, she did not hesitate for a moment in saying 'Yes' to God and agreeing to become the mother of our Lord. And let us never forget that Mary's journey was neither simple nor straightforward.

Betrothed at a very early age, probably terrified of what her fate would hold when she became pregnant out of wedlock and quite unsure of what carrying the Messiah could mean, she never wavered in her trust and belief in God. And this was not all. Mary grievously suffered as she witnessed her beloved son tortured and put to death by crucifixion.

Mary's Example

Mary is the perfect example to us all. One who intercedes on our behalf with her son Jesus, and continuously points the way to him. She is the sublime mother to each and every one of us.

And so, when speaking to someone else of Our Lady, we should never be afraid to refer to her as 'Your Mother'. As Christians we have several titles for Mary, but none so accurate or fitting as our Mother...

As I was playing the piano in the School chapel one lunchtime, a boy came in called Sean. He was in and out of School regularly, often suspended due to anger issues.

He sat and listened to the piano, then asked if I wouldnt mind teaching him a piece on the piano. Sean spent each break time, and luntime for the next 3 months learning this one piece of Music. He went from nearly breaking the piano on the first day, because he couldnt play it straight away, to performing in the Summer concert at the end of the School year (much to the surprise of many of his class teachers).

His grandfather came into School to watch him play at the concert. As Sean played in his smart suit, with his gentle beautiful playing of the Music, his grandfather had tears in his eyes. He had never seen his grandson so happy and be so peaceful before.

At the end of the concert, Sean came over to me to thank me for the help I had given him, to which I explained that I hadnt realy done much, he had done all the work really.

He then said to me.

"Now I know why you were playing in the Chapel that day! You weren't playing by yourself were you! God was there. Just like he was with me today when I played. I guess he was always there, it just took me a while to hear him."

Where language can be a barrier, Music breaks them all down and flows through us, we just need to give ourselves a minute to listen. Just give ourselves a minute

Benefits of the Sun

Despite the obvious health issues of staying in the Sun – there are some benefits of being exposed to sunlight in careful moderation. Sunlight causes our bodies to produce Vitamin D which has various health benefits from strong bones to possible benefits to prevent cancer. For your body to produce enough vitamin D it is recommended to have regular short bursts of sun – just a few minutes during the day between April and October. Alternatively, you can give your child Vitamin D supplements in the form of vitamin drops. These can be bought from most supermarkets and chemists. In Ireland they are not available on any health scheme but in the UK drops are available from Health Visitors and clinics. Babies who have 500ml of formula feed do not need drops as most formula milk will be fortified with vitimins.

Most of us look forward with great enthusiasm to long sunny days during the Summer. Whilst enjoying the opportunity for picnics, trips to the park or the beach or just enjoying some time outside, we do still need to think about the suns effect on our bodies.

Here are some top tips to help keep your children stay safe in the sun...

Apply sun cream on all exposed areas of the body during the day. Even on cloudy days children can get burnt. Pay special attention to nose, ears, cheeks, shoulders, back, neck and tops of feet and they catch the sunlight. The higher the factor sun cream the better the protection – factor 15 or higher protects against UVA and UVB rays – see below for more info.

If your child has very light skin they are generally more likely to burn – however, this does not mean children with darker skin will not burn.

Pope Francis' Vision for Europe

This is taken from a speech where the Pope accepted the Charlemagne Award for his work in favour of integration and union in Europe. We should make it clear that the Pope was not in any way addressing the political situation in any individual European Country – however, he does address this vision to all members of Europe – both as individuals and as countries.

Creativity, genius and a capacity for rebirth and renewal are part of the soul of Europe. In the last century, Europe bore witness to humanity that a new beginning was indeed possible. After years of tragic conflicts, culminating in the most horrific war ever known, there emerged, by God's grace, something completely new in human history. The ashes of the ruins could not extinguish the ardent hope and the quest of solidarity that inspired the founders of the European project. They laid the foundations for a bastion of peace, an edifice made up of states united not by force but by free commitment to the common good and a definitive end to confrontation. Europe, so long divided, finally found its true self and began to build its house.

This 'family of peoples', which has commendably expanded in the meantime, seems of late to feel less at home within the walls of the common home. At times, those walls themselves have been built in a way varying from the insightful plans left by the original builders. Their new and exciting desire to create unity seems to be fading; we, the heirs of their dream, are tempted to yield to our own selfish interests and to consider putting up fences here and there. Nonetheless, I am convinced that resignation and weariness do not belong to the soul of Europe, and that even 'our problems can become powerful forces for unity'.

...We would do well to turn to the founding fathers of Europe. They were prepared to pursue alternative and innovative paths in a world scarred by war. Not only did they boldly conceive the idea of Europe, but they dared to change radically the models that had led only to violence and destruction. They dared to seek multilateral solutions to increasingly shared problems.

...The founding fathers were heralds of peace and prophets of the future. Today more than ever, their vision inspires us to build bridges and tear down walls. That vision urges us not to be content with cosmetic retouches or convoluted compromises aimed at correcting this or that treaty, but courageously to lay new and solid foundations.

...I dream of a Europe that cares for children, that offers fraternal help to the poor and those newcomers seeking acceptance because they have lost everything and need shelter. I dream of a Europe that is attentive to and concerned for the infirm and the elderly, lest they be simply set aside as useless. I dream of a Europe where being a migrant is not a crime but a summons to greater commitment on behalf of the dignity of every human being. I dream of a Europe where young people breathe the pure air of honesty, where they love the beauty of a culture and a simple life undefiled by the insatiable needs of consumerism, where getting married and having children is a responsibility and a great joy, not a problem due to the lack of stable employment. I dream of a Europe of families, with truly effective policies concentrated on faces rather than numbers, on birth rates more than rates of consumption. I dream of a Europe that promotes and protects the rights of everyone, without neglecting its duties towards all. I dream of a Europe of which it will not be said that its commitment to human rights was its last utopia".
